GTM and Social Playbook

Everything to launch and keep momentum: the strategy, every creative with its caption and hashtags, and a week by week posting schedule. Built to keep on your phone.

Non-partisan. Every number real and source-linked. paisawatch.live

The strategy

Positioning

The receipt for your taxes. A free, source-linked window into where India's public money went and what the people who spend it have declared. Not opinion. Not a side. Just the numbers you were owed.

The villain is not a party

It is never the government. It is the dark you were kept in: opacity and apathy. That framing is unifying, it is undeniable, and it protects the one asset this tool has, which is credibility. An anti-government angle gets the data branded as propaganda and loses half the room.

The emotional spine

Vulnerability: you fund the country and were shown nothing. Curiosity: can you even name your own MP. Empowerment: now you can see it, in 10 seconds, free.

The one rule

Every number stays true and sourced. The truth here is already brutal, so it needs no exaggeration. A transparency tool caught using a made up stat is finished. Truth is both the bait and the moat.

Posting schedule

Times are IST. Lead with the Reel for reach, hit LinkedIn on its best day, run Stories daily, and never push two heavy pieces into the same hour.

Launch week

Day	Time	What to post
Mon	8-9 PM	IG Story: Nearly half. Warm up the audience.
Tue	9:30 AM	Substack article + dark header.
Tue	12:30 PM	IG Feed: How rich is your MP.
Tue	8 PM	IG Story: rotate hook (You're poorer).
Wed	10 AM	LinkedIn article + white banner. Best slot of the week.
Wed	8 PM	IG Reel: Nearly half. Your biggest reach asset.
Thu	9:30 AM	LinkedIn short native post. Link in first comment.
Thu	8 PM	IG Story: rotate hook (They have your PAN).
Fri	12:30 PM	IG Feed or Story only. Keep it light.
Sat/Sun	evening	Stories only, casual.

The repeatable rhythm

LinkedIn: 1 to 2 a week, Tue to Thu, 9:30 to 11 AM. Alternate an article and a short native post.

Instagram Feed: 2 to 3 a week, weekdays 12 to 1 PM or 7 to 9 PM.

Instagram Story: daily, evenings 7 to 10 PM. Rotate the hooks so none repeats two days running.

Instagram Reel: 1 to 2 a week, Tue to Fri evening. This is the growth engine, so protect the slot.

Substack: once a week or every two weeks, Tue or Sun morning.

Three rules that beat timing

1. Post native. Upload the image or video. Put the link in the first comment, never in the post body.
2. Guard the first 60 to 90 minutes. Reply to early comments fast. Early engagement decides reach.
3. Salary and inflation posts ride appraisal season (roughly March to May and mid year). Weight them then.

The creatives

Each image is saved in the paisawatch-creatives folder on your Mac at full ad size. Rebuild in Canva if you want to tweak, or upload as is.

This is the opening frame, not the video. Use it as the thumbnail or first 2 seconds.

Reel hook, said to camera, captions one line at a time:

1. Nearly half the MPs in India have a criminal case on them.
2. Not a rumour. They wrote it themselves, on their own election form.
3. And you do not even know if yours is one of them.

Then: Takes 10 seconds to check. Type your area. Free. Go look.

Best time: Tue to Fri evening, 7 to 9 PM IST. No music for the first 3 seconds.

You got a raise. Are you sure you got richer?

Every year around appraisal season the same thing happens. A number goes up. You feel good. Maybe you tell your family, maybe you upgrade something, and then life carries on.

Here is the question almost nobody stops to ask. Did that raise actually make you richer, or did it just look like it? A raise only makes you wealthier if it beats one silent opponent. Inflation.

The math nobody does

Say you got a 9 percent raise. Sounds healthy. Now put it against roughly 6 percent inflation, which is close to where India has been sitting. Your money already buys about 6 percent less than it did a year ago. So your real gain is not 9 percent. It is closer to 3. Then tax arrives, taxed at your slab, so a slice of even that sliver is gone before it reaches your account.

A 9 percent raise, in the real world, is often a low single digit improvement. And if your raise came in below inflation, and plenty do, your salary did not grow at all. It shrank. Same job, same employer, quietly taking home less than last year. The payslip just never says that out loud.

Why we never notice

Because you are shown the comfortable number and never the real one. Your offer letter shows CTC. Your appraisal shows a percentage. Nothing shows you the after inflation, after tax truth. So we keep celebrating raises that were barely raises. I got tired of guessing, so I built a calculator that does the honest math in about 10 seconds. Free, no sign up, no ads, at paisawatch.live/tools.

The bigger version of the same problem

Checking my own salary made me realise something. If I never do the math on my own money, I definitely never do it on the country's. We hand over a piece of every paycheck in tax, and get no receipt. Most of us cannot even name our own MP, let alone say what they declared. None of it is secret. It is just scattered across government portals no normal person will ever open. So I put that in one place too. The same site shows where public money goes and what every sitting representative declared: their assets, their pending cases, their attendance. Every figure links back to its official source.

The point

You are not powerless. You are just kept from the real number. Whether it is your salary or your taxes, the honest figure already exists, and once you see it you cannot unsee it. So do two things this week. Check what your last raise was really worth, and look up your own MP. Start here: paisawatch.live

The number they let you see

On raises that are not raises, taxes with no receipt, and the quiet habit of being shown the comfortable figure instead of the true one.

There is a specific kind of happiness that shows up once a year, usually in an email with your manager's name at the top. Your salary has gone up. Some percentage, printed clean. For a day or two you feel a little richer, a little safer. I want to gently take that feeling apart. Not to make you miserable, but to show you a number you were never actually shown.

A raise is a race, and nobody told you the other runner's time

When your salary rises, it is running against inflation. If prices climb faster than your pay, you are moving backward while feeling like you moved forward. On a normal Indian appraisal you get 9 percent. Inflation is around 6. Your rupee already buys less than last year, so the real value of that raise is closer to 3 percent. Then the increase gets taxed at your slab, and a piece of the little that is left disappears before you see it. If your raise landed below inflation, which happens more than anyone admits, you did not get a raise at all. Your salary shrank in real terms.

The comfortable number

Notice what you are shown, and what you are not. You are shown CTC, a big number that includes things you never touch. You are shown a percentage that feels like progress. You are never shown the one figure that actually matters, which is what your money is worth after inflation and after tax. Comfortable numbers keep people calm. Real numbers make them ask questions. So I built a small tool that does the real math for anyone in about ten seconds. Free, no login, no ads.

The same trick, one scale up

If I could go years without checking the truth of my own salary, what were the chances I had ever checked the truth of the country's money. We each hand over a slice of every paycheck and get no receipt. Ask where it went and there is no clean answer anywhere a normal person would look. Most of us cannot name our own MP. And the strangest part is that none of it is secret. It is public, just buried across a dozen government websites, so that technically available and practically invisible become the same thing.

Building the receipt

So I put that in the same place. The site now shows where public money goes, mapped by state and sector, and holds the declared record of every sitting representative I could verify, each figure carrying a link back to its official source. A pending case is a charge, not a conviction. Declared assets are what someone wrote on a form, not an audit. Where a record is not published, the site says so rather than invent it. The plain facts are heavier than any exaggeration. Nearly half of the Members of Parliament analysed declared a pending criminal case, in their own words, on their own election forms.

The point of all of it

You are not powerless. You are simply kept away from the real number and handed a comfortable one instead. Your raise. Your taxes. Your representative. In every case the honest figure already exists, and the only thing between you and it is that no one made it easy to see. So this week, do two small things. Find out what your last raise was actually worth. Then look up your own MP. The receipt was always yours. You were just never handed it. paisawatch.live
