

PaisaWatch

GTM & Social Playbook

360-degree launch plan, SEO, channel copy, creatives and a one-tap reminder calendar.

Launch window starts Wednesday, 8 July 2026, 8:30 PM IST.

Read this first: the timing reality

It is Wednesday, 8 July 2026, about 8 PM. The Wednesday 10 AM LinkedIn slot has already passed, and 8 PM is a weak hour for LinkedIn and X. Forcing the flagship posts out tonight would waste them. So the plan does what a human would do:

- Tonight (evening-native only): Instagram Story, WhatsApp family group, and your personal WhatsApp status. Intimate, low-effort, high-trust. This seeds the first ripple.
- Tomorrow morning (Thu 9 Jul): the flagship LinkedIn article at 9:30 AM and the X launch thread at 9 AM, both inside their prime 9 to 11 AM window.
- Then a paced 8-day rollout across every channel, each asset dropped at its best hour, not all at once.

Timing is a 10 to 20 percent lever, not a 100 percent one. Consistency and a true, specific hook matter more. Every number you post must be true and, wherever it is a claim, source-linked. That is the one rule that keeps this shareable by both sides.

1. SEO titles and descriptions

Paste these into the title and meta-description / SEO fields of each surface. Titles are kept under ~60 characters and descriptions under ~155 so they do not get cut off in Google and link previews.

Surface	SEO title	Meta description
LinkedIn article	Your raise might be a pay cut. Here is the math.	A 9% raise against 6% inflation is not a 9% better life. The honest after-inflation number, plus a free 10-second calculator to check yours.
Substack article	Is your raise actually beating inflation?	On raises that are not raises, taxes with no receipt, and the one figure nobody hands you. Two free tools to check both, in under a minute.
Homepage (paisawatch.live)	PaisaWatch: Track India's public money, taxes and your MP	See where India's tax money goes, what your MP or MLA declared, and whether your salary beats inflation. Free, source-linked, non-partisan.
Tools page (/tools)	Free India money tools: income tax, EMI, SIP, inflation	Check your income tax, EMI, SIP returns and whether your raise beats inflation. Free, no sign-up, built on official numbers.
Social link preview (OG tags)	How rich is your MP? See where your taxes went.	Free and source-linked. Look up any MP or MLA's declared assets, cases and attendance, and check if your salary beats inflation.

Hashtag sets (do not spray all of them everywhere):

4. Ready-to-paste copy, by channel

X / Twitter launch thread (post Thu 9 AM, pin tweet 1)

- 1/ You pay tax every month. You have never seen the bill. So I built it. paisawatch.live shows where India's public money went, what your MP declared, and whether your raise beat inflation. Free. A thread on what is inside.
- 2/ Type your constituency. See your MP's declared assets, pending court cases and attendance. All from official affidavits. Not my opinion. Their own filings.
- 3/ A pending case is not a conviction. The tool links the original record every time, so you judge, not me.
- 4/ The part that stings: enter your salary from a few years ago and today. Most raises quietly lose to inflation. The calculator shows the real number in 10 seconds. paisawatch.live/tools
- 5/ No party. No agenda. Just the receipt you already paid for. Look up your own state, then tell me you are not curious. paisawatch.live

Facebook post (Fri morning)

You fund this country every single month. Have you ever seen where it goes? PaisaWatch is a free, non-partisan tool that shows where India's public money was spent, what your MP or MLA declared about their own assets and court cases, and whether your salary actually beat inflation over the years. Every number links back to the official source. No sign-up. No side. Look up your own constituency in 2 minutes: paisawatch.live

WhatsApp family group (tonight, warm and personal)

Found something worth a look. It is a free site that shows where our tax money actually goes, and you can look up our own MP or MLA's declared assets and court cases from official records. I also checked the salary-vs-inflation thing on it and it was a bit of an eye-opener. Have a look: paisawatch.live

WhatsApp job / professional groups (Sat, value-first, disclose)

Sharing a free tool I built, no ads, no login: paisawatch.live/tools has an income-tax estimator, EMI and SIP calculators, and one that tells you if your salary actually beat inflation over the last few years. The main site also maps where public money goes. Might be useful before appraisal season. Feedback welcome.

Title: I built a free tool that shows where India's tax money goes and whether your salary actually beat inflation

Body: No login, no ads. It maps public spending by state, lets you look up an MP or MLA's declared assets, pending cases and attendance from official affidavits (every figure links to the source), and has calculators for tax, EMI, SIP and salary-vs-inflation. I am the builder, happy to take feedback and corrections. Please follow each sub's self-promo rules and reply in the comments. paisawatch.live

LinkedIn native post (Mon, salary-vs-inflation hook)

You got a 9% raise. Inflation was 6%. So you are 9% better off, right? No. You are roughly 3% better off, before tax. After tax, often less. Most people never run that number. I built a free calculator that does it in 10 seconds, next to a tool that shows where your tax actually goes. No sign-up: paisawatch.live/tools. What was your last raise really worth?

5. The creatives (with caption, hashtags, timing)

6. LinkedIn article (full text)

Title: You got a raise. You might be poorer.

Every year the same ritual. The appraisal email lands, there is a number, and for a week it feels like progress. Then life quietly costs more, and by the next appraisal you cannot quite explain where the raise went.

Here is the arithmetic almost nobody runs.

A raise is a nominal number. Inflation is the tax nobody sends you a bill for. If your salary went up 9 percent and prices went up 6 percent, you did not get 9 percent richer. Your real gain is closer to 3 percent, and that is before income tax takes its cut of the raise itself. In years when inflation runs hot, a raise can leave you standing still, even though the number on the letter went up.

None of this is a conspiracy. It is just that we are shown the nominal number and never the real one. The nominal number feels good. The real number is the one that decides whether your life actually improved.

So I did two things. First, I ran my own numbers, honestly, and it was humbling. Second, I built a free tool that does it for anyone in about ten seconds. You put in what you earned a few years ago and what you earn now. It tells you the real change after inflation. No sign-up, no ads, no catch. paisawatch.live/tools

But the salary calculator is only half of it. The same project answers a bigger question most of us have also never checked: where does the money the government takes from you actually go?

Every month, before your salary even reaches your account, a portion leaves as tax. It becomes roads, schools, hospitals, defence. You have paid into that system your entire working life. Have you ever seen the receipt?

PaisaWatch is that receipt. It maps public spending by state, and it lets you look up your own MP or MLA and see what they themselves declared: assets, pending court cases, attendance. Every figure links back to the official source, because the point is not to tell you what to think. The point is to hand you the numbers you already paid for and let you decide.

There is no party in this. No side. The only villain is the dark you were kept in.

Two things you can do in the next five minutes. One, check whether your last raise actually beat inflation, at paisawatch.live/tools. Two, look up your own constituency and see where the money went, at paisawatch.live.

Then ask yourself one question the number on your appraisal letter will never answer: are you actually richer, or just keeping up?

7. Substack article (full text)

Title: The number they let you see

Subtitle: On raises that are not raises, taxes with no receipt, and the one figure nobody hands you.

There are two kinds of numbers in your financial life. The ones they show you, and the ones they do not. The gap between them is where most of your money quietly lives.

Start with the friendliest number you get all year: your raise. It arrives with a little ceremony. A meeting, a letter, a percentage. Nine percent. It feels like being seen, like being rewarded. And it is real, in the sense that the digits in your account go up.

But a raise is a nominal number, and nominal numbers are the ones they let you see because they flatter. The number they do not show you is what that raise is worth after inflation has taken its silent cut. Prices rose while you worked. If they rose six percent and you got nine, your actual gain is about three, and the taxman takes a slice of even that. Some years the raise and the inflation cancel out and you have run hard just to stay in the same place.

Nobody lied to you. They just showed you the flattering number and stayed quiet about the honest one.

I find this pattern everywhere once I start looking.

Consider the biggest deduction of your life. Every month, before your salary lands, tax leaves. Over a career it is a staggering sum. It becomes roads and schools and hospitals and soldiers. It is the single largest purchase you will ever make, and you make it involuntarily, in installments, for decades. And here is the strange part: you have never been handed a receipt. You know exactly what your phone bill bought. You have no idea what your tax bought.

That asymmetry bothered me enough to build something.

It is called PaisaWatch, and it is free. Two ideas sit inside it.

The first is personal. A calculator that takes your salary from a few years ago and your salary today and tells you the real change, after inflation, in about ten seconds. It is the honest number, the one the appraisal letter never prints. Some people run it and feel fine. Some run it and go quiet. Either way, now you know.

paisawatch.live/tools

The second is public. A map of where the country's money actually went, state by state, and a way to look up your own MP or MLA and see what they declared about themselves: their assets, their pending court cases, their attendance in the house that spends your money. Every figure links to the original official record. I am not asking you to trust me. I am asking you to read the source.

I want to be careful about one thing, because it is the thing that makes this worth doing. This is not an argument against the government, or for any party. A pending case is not a conviction, the tool says so, and it links you to the record so you can judge for yourself. The villain here is not a person. It is opacity. It is the habit of showing you the flattering number and hiding the honest one, until you stop expecting the honest one at all.

You can end that habit for yourself tonight, in five minutes. Check what your last raise was really worth. Then look up where your money went. Two numbers they never volunteered, both of them yours.

The country does not change because you looked. But you do. And a country full of people who have seen the honest number is a harder country to keep in the dark. paisawatch.live

8. How to load all the reminders on your phone

- Option A (all 13 at once): open PaisaWatch-launch-calendar.ics on your phone. On iPhone, tap it and choose 'Add All' to your calendar. On Android, open it with Google Calendar. Each event fires a reminder 15 minutes before.
- Option B (one at a time): in the schedule table on page 4, tap any 'Add to Calendar' link. Google Calendar opens with that single event pre-filled; tap Save.
- Get the files on your phone: open the GitHub folder github.com/susrijambagi-boop/paisawatch (the 'marketing' folder) and download this PDF and the .ics, or AirDrop them from your Mac.

One rule above all: every number you post must be true and, where it is a claim, link to its source. That is what lets both sides share this without calling it biased. It is the whole strategy in one sentence.
